From the tests made thus far, they seem to be able to develop and utilize more cylinder horse power for the weight on wheels than any other form of simple or compound locomotive yet introduced, and in connection with this, let me say that the successful and broad minded locomotive man of to-day must not look to his own department alone for economical results, but he must constantly consider what the effect of the practice indulged in by his department is going to be upon the other departments of the railway. Therefore the necessity of the designer having before him constantly, the effect of the engine that he designs upon the road bed, bearing in mind that it must be his aim to at all times make such a machine as will reduce the cost of maintenance...
