Excerpt: . . . experiment in agricultural education has been in progress at this institution during the past three years. The special course of instruction and training in poultry culture has met with such hearty approval, and the inquiries for information as to its details have been so numerous, that it has been considered wise to issue a bulletin explaining the history and particulars of the course. In considering the agricultural needs of Rhode Island the thought kept recurring, why should not this State push her specialities in farming as she has so successfully done in manufacturing and commercial lines From a study of the rural conditions and the agricultural situation in the State, it was very evident that success in special farming ought to become the motto of the progressive Rhode Island husbandman. A very important speciality is poultry farming, and the excellent conditions prevailing in Rhode Island favorable to poultryculture raised the question of possible means and methods for aiding and advancing this calling in the State. A poultry plant for experimental purposes had already been established by the Experiment Station. A College poultry plant was started in November, 1897, on rented land, and about a year later the two poultry plants were combined. It having been urged by several practical poultrymen, and especially emphasized by the editors of leading poultry papers, that there was a strong demand for instruction in poultry keeping, it was determined to try the experiment of offering a special course of...
