Antiterrorism (AT). AT refers to defensive measures taken to reduce the vulnerability of personnel, facilities, and equipment to acts of terrorism. As stated earlier, AT should not be used as a synonymous term with Force Protection. Rather, AT is a sub-element of combating terrorism, which is a subset of the broader FP concept. The AT program must be a collective, pro-active effort focused on detecting and preventing terrorist attacks, preparing to defend against attacks, and responding to consequences of terrorist inci-dents. In the expeditionary environment, three key areas where civil engi-neers contribute significantly to AT are: (1) ensuring sufficient standoff be-tween identified threats and mission-critical assets, (2) perimeter security, and (3) mitigation of blast and fragmentation effects through facility hardening and other means. Reference JP 3-07. 2 and AFI 10-245 for additional details on AT standards and procedures. 2. 3. Counterterrorism. Counterterrorism refers to offensive measures taken to prevent, deter, and respond to terrorism. US counterterrorism policy is based upon four principles: (1) the government makes no concessions to or agreements with terrorists; (2) terrorists must be brought to justice for their crimes; (3) states that sponsor terrorists and terrorism must be isolated and pressured so as to force a change of behavior; and (4) the counterterrorism capabilities of countries allied with the US, and those requiring assistance in fighting terrorism, must be bolstered. Civil engineers contribute to counterter-rorism efforts in many ways...
