Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from A Concise and Suggestive Manual for Teachers In each book there is repeated reference to some distinctive line of wholesome thought, which has the background of a worthy motive. The keynote of Book One is Busy Folk; of Book Two, Lend a Hand of Book Three, Neighbors; of Book Four, Working Together; and of Book Five, Opportunity. In each book the dominant social appeal, emphasizing the value of industry, kindness, service, and fellowship, is made by representing generous, outgoing activity. The books introduce children at the very beginning of their school work to literature and life. The theme of the selections may not at first be recognized by the pupils, but soon the point of each story will dawn upon them with impelling force. Secondly, these readers in the lower grades give unusual emphasis to the cumulative tale. Through it there is a constant reappearing of old words and a careful introduction of new words. The development moves forward by easy steps. By this plan children begin at once with stories of which they never grow weary; stories that are as fresh and interesting the hundredth time they are told or read as they were at first. and outcome which the mind easily follows. The story by its structure meets the child's first need of grasping a connected literary whole, and thus from the very start reading is a joyous exercise.
